

Botanical Name: Nandina domestica 'Nana'

Common Name: Dwarf heavenly bamboo

Type of Plant: dicot; shrub Character evergreen

Habit of Growth:

Overall Shape miniature of standard Nandina, clumping habit, with many closely branched, erect, slender stems, densely set coarse, horizontal foliage, creates a small, overall dome-like effect

Height 1 to 1-1/2' Spread 1-2' Growth Rate slow

Environment:

Exposure outdoors full or partial sun, tolerates shade

Soil prefers well draining loam, tolerates most

Hardiness hardy (zones 5-24)

Morphology:

Leaves 2-3 times pinnately compound, leaflets ovate-lanceolate,
2-3" long, pale greenish purple in summer to reddish purple in winter

Flowers not known to produce flowers

Fruit not known to produce fruit

Propagation: division of clump, semihardwood cuttings

Usage: facier or low filler shrub used for overall clumping form and foliage rock gardens, container plant -- excellent for use in small landscapes

Landscape Care:

Watering prefers regular, tolerates some drought after established

Fertilizing balanced in spring, iron for chlorosis

Pruning none

Pests/Diseases relatively free

Special Conditions

Origin: Japan Family: Berberidaceae